GET SNAPPING TO ENTER 2013 SAVEWATER![®] PHOTOGRAPHIC COMPETITION

The international 2013 savewater![®] photographic competition is calling for budding photographers from around the world to share their photographs that illustrate the value of water and conserving it for the future.

The photographic competition is designed to recognise creative talent with water conservation imagery as the key focus. There are three categories in this competition: Junior Student (up to 12 years old), Senior Student (13 to 17 years old), and Open.

Prizes on offer include: a new MacBook Pro, digital cameras, photography software Adobe Lightroom, iPod shuffles and an iPad mini, with selected images to be used in international water campaigns.

"The savewater![®] photographic competition is a wonderful forum in which photographers can be recognised for their artistry, as well as help inspire others to understand the value of water through beautiful images. I encourage all photographers from around the globe to enter" says Mr Nigel Finney, CEO of the savewater![®] Alliance.

Last year, there were some spectacular entries from around the world, including the winning photograph in the open category by Md Khalid Rayhan Shawon from Bangladesh.

This year, photographers will have more chances to win, with a public vote taking place on social media once the finalists have been announced.

savewater![®] also welcomes Bosch Appliances as the major corporate sponsor of the competition in 2013, a leader in providing innovative water efficient technology for households.
